Accessing the standards through your trade login

Standards New Zealand owns the copyright in all standards. Your use of these standards must comply with the terms and conditions of access and use imposed by Standards New Zealand.

You may:

- Download a single copy of a standard for temporary use on a personal computer for internal purposes only

You may not:

- Download the standards or parts of the standards to a storage device of any kind
- Retain downloaded standards for the purpose of building an electronic reference collection
- Print downloaded standards for the purpose of building a hardcopy reference collection
- Modify, merge with other software or documents, or circulate (including by email for internal purposes) the standards or any part of the standards
- Sell or transfer the standards, in whole or in part, to any third party
- Place the standards on any network of any sort
- Modify, adapt, reverse engineer, decompile, disassemble, or create derivative works based on the standards or any part of the standards
- Store, process, review, or transmit the standards content using artificial intelligence, machine learning models, or similar technologies

You must:

- Delete any downloaded standard as soon as you have finished using it
- Delete any downloaded standard if you do not hold a current practising licence
- Not transfer, sell, lease, licence, rent, or loan your access to the standards to a third party (whether for payment or not)
- Keep all user identification and access information, including logins and passwords, secret and secure and:
  - not permit any third party to use your login
  - not disclose or provide your password to any third party or any information that would allow them to gain access to the standards
  - use all reasonable efforts to ensure no improper or unauthorised use is made of your identification information

- Ensure no unauthorised user attempts to damage, interfere with, or harm the standards website of online library service, including using a robot, spider, scraper, other automated means of access to the standards.

Failure to comply with these terms of access may result in a practitioner losing their right to access the standards online.
